THE CREDIT CARD TIME BOMB

HOW ON EARTH could a Government that took a country into an illegal war against the wishes of its people be re-elected to serve another five-year term?

How could politicians that have presided over the dismantling of British industry and the off-shoring of British jobs to Eastern Europe and the Far East be returned to Westminster?

How could a political party that has actively encouraged the settlement of economic migrants in the country with all the strains and stresses this puts on our essential services and the population as a whole, get another mandate to continue for more of the same?

The answer is simple. It has happened because a majority of the British people have disengaged from the political system and turned inwards, just living for the present and thinking solely of themselves and their family.

"At the moment life can go on relatively undisturbed thanks to the credit card and the short term escapism that it can buy."

They have been able to do this because outside pressures of every day life have been temporarily put on hold thanks to the availability of unlimited credit. The bigger picture of Britain's current situation and the looming crises ahead should be setting the alarm bells ringing in homes up and down the country, but at the moment, life can go on relatively undisturbed thanks to the credit card and the short term escapism that it can buy.

Lloyds TSB, the largest unsecured lender in the UK, is just the latest bank to announce an increase in the number of customers facing repayment difficulties on credit cards and personal loans.

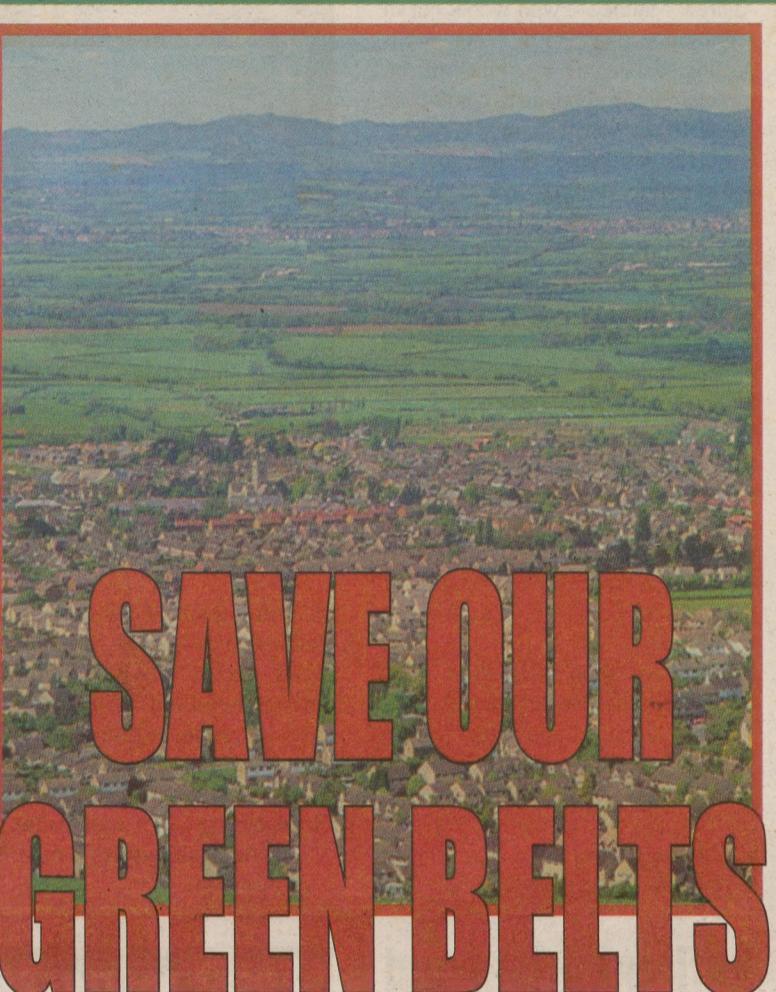

The average family now owes £19,000 on credit cards and this spiralling debt crisis in Britain prompted the Government to create a £45 million fund to pay for hundreds

FOR THE past 50 years Green Belts have acted as boundaries successfully stopping urban sprawl and protecting the countryside around our towns and cities. Our Green Belts have improved the quality of life of everyone.

But now these boundaries are being breached, not only by huge housing developments but also by new roads, to provide easy access for a newly dispersed population to return to the cities for work.

The Government is being forced to concrete over Green Belt land because Britain's population is mushrooming out of control.

As economic migrants pour into our inner cities to fill service industry jobs and keep wages down, Brits are leaving in their droves, moving to the towns and countryside in the hope of hanging on to their traditional lifestyle for a little longer. Existing property outside of our cities cannot meet this demand, so Tony Blair and John Prescott have launched a house and road building programme that will change the face of our countryside forever.

What they call their 'Sustainable Communities Plan' proposes huge development in the South Midlands, South East and East of England. Areas earmarked for intensive growth are Peterborough, Milton Keynes, the 'Thames Gateway' and Ashford in Kent. Labour wants to build half a million homes on greenfield land in the London commuter belt alone within the next 30 years. That would cover an area of some 44 square miles – the size of the city of Newcastle-upon-Tyne.

RENOVATION

NOT DEMOLITION

RENOVATE HOMES AND REBUILD COMMUNITIES

A tale of two policemen

A POLICE community officer was arrested after Labour Party activists claimed he was a member of the British National Party and had been using the police computer to check on anti-BNP campaigners.

Andrew Matthews, who works out of Morley police station in Leeds and is training to become a regular officer, was identified by opponents coming out of a BNP election meeting in Kirklees. His arrest took place despite the fact that as a support officer, Mr Matthews has no access to the police computer. Not concerned with such minor detail, Labour MP for Morley and Rothwell, Colin Challen, demanded "a very firm response" from the Chief Constable of West Yorkshire police.

Meanwhile there was no firm response from Scotland Yard when dealing with an allegation of a rape involving an officer from an ethnic minority.

Despite an inquiry spanning two years, the policeman was never even interviewed or questioned because of fears that it would be seen as "a racist witch-hunt".

In cases of rape allegations it is normal procedure for anyone involved in the alleged incident to be interviewed under caution before a decision is taken on whether to press charges. In this instance, however, the Metropolitan Police were said to have been "walking on eggshells" in the wake of the Macpherson Report, published in 1999, which said that the force was "institutionally racist".

At an industrial tribunal in June, Police Commissioner, Sir Ian Blair, faced accusations of "politically correct meddling" in a disciplinary case involving white officers. He was said to have been keen to make examples of the officers, who faced charges of racist behaviour, even though an inquiry had already cleared them.

Anti-semitism and Muslim extremists

THE desecration of eighty seven graves at a Jewish cemetery in West Ham, east London coincided with a warning from the European Commission against Racism and Intolerance which said it was "concerned at the considerable and steady increase of anti-Semitic incidents in the United Kingdom." The report by the European human rights watchdog explained that these incidents usually mirror tensions in the Middle East because "an increasing number of manifestations of anti-Semitism is reportedly coming from Muslim fundamentalist groups. West Ham is in the London borough of Newham where the ethnic minorities are in the majority, making up 70% of the population.

Human sacrifice

YOUNG AFRICAN boys are being smuggled into Britain as intended human sacrifices at the behest of fundamentalist sects. That is the finding of a Metropolitan Police report into "faith crimes" commissioned after the death of eight-year-old Victoria Climbié, who was starved to death by relatives who thought she was possessed.

Scotland Yard said that 300 black boys under seven years of age, had vanished from London schools.

At present detectives in the capital are investigating 30 allegations of children being abused in magic rituals, but John Azar, an adviser to the Metropolitan Police, said that known cases are just the "tip of the iceberg". The report was attacked by Dr William Henry, a lecturer in sociology at Goldsmith's College, who said it was racist because it portrayed Africans as uncivilised and irrational.

BNP would have won seats under PR

THE BRITISH National Party would have won seats in parliament if May's General Election had been held under proportional representation (PR) according to a study by experts at the London School of Economics and Oxford University.

They found that PR would "make a huge difference to the patterns of political representation across Britain". The research to be published in the book Britain Votes 2005, showed Labour's number of MPs was disproportionately high given their share of the vote. It gained only 35 per cent of the vote but got 355 MPs because the election was held under first-the-past-the-post system where the winner takes all. Had the election been held using the PR system of Germany and New Zealand, Labour would have 234 MPs (down from 355) and the Tories would have 210 MPs (up from 197). The Liberal Democrats, who won 62 seats, would have 145, forcing Labour into a coalition pact.

Under the system recommended in a report commissioned by Mr Blair, Labour would have had to strike a coalition deal. It would have 299 seats, rather than 355, the Tories would have had the same result of 197, and the Liberal Democrats would have taken 107 seats instead of 62. All three PR systems simulated would see the BNP winning seats. The study's overall finding was that "the Conservatives would gain little from PR and Labour would lose but the Liberal Democrats and smaller parties would make big gains."

European Union wants to ban BNP

THE European Union wants to ban the British National Party because too many British people are supporting it at the ballot box.

The European Commission against Racism and Intolerance (ECRI), set up by EU heads of state to investigate racism and xenophobia, has reported that it is worried by the success of the British National Party in building "considerable local support bases in certain areas".

In the light of the BNP establishing itself as Britain's fourth most popular political party at the General Election and polling nearly a million votes at last year's European Elections, the ECRI has urged Downing Street to "consider outlawing the British National Party."

BNP chairman, Nick Griffin, described the report from Brussels as 'a classic'.

"What further proof can there be of the anti-democratic nature of the European Union. When voters in a country support a political party that is opposed to the EU, they want it banned.

"In this federal Europe of theirs, there would be no freedom of political thought and no democracy. The EU really is George Orwell's 1984."

After EU report slates the General Election campaign Labour pledge to end immigration debate

HOME Secretary, Charles Clarke, told the Cabinet that he was outraged that so much time was given to the immigration and asylum debate during the General Election campaign and he has pledged such discussion will never take place again!

Charles Clarke was responding to a critical report by the European Commission against Racism and Intolerance (ECRI), which denounced the use of "provocative, sensationalist and sometimes outright racist language" in the debate on asylum and immigration in the run-up to polling day.

The Home Secretary said the Government would launch a fresh drive to sell the benefits of economic migration to voters in an effort "to draw the poison out of the issue".

The ECRI report said that Labour just weren't doing enough to build links between communities or to promote racial equality. It warned Downing Street:

"In spite of initiatives taken, members of ethnic and religious minority groups continue to experience racism and discrimination."

The EU quango also complained about the negative attitudes to blacks and Asians among Britain's policemen, the disproportionate number of non-white prisoners in Britain's jails, and the prejudice and discrimination against Muslims in legislation to safeguard Britain from terrorist attack.

No longer taboo

Exactly how Charles Clarke intends to remove immigration and asylum from the political agenda remains to be seen.

The Tories adopted the issue during the General Election after a senior adviser told them in Spring 2004 that they faced "political oblivion" unless the party "grasped the nettle of immigration".

The very visible changing face of Britain

BARKING, ESSEX: A reception class at St Margaret's Church of England School. The rapid change in the make-up of Britain's population is something that Labour can't hide. It will always be an issue to debate.

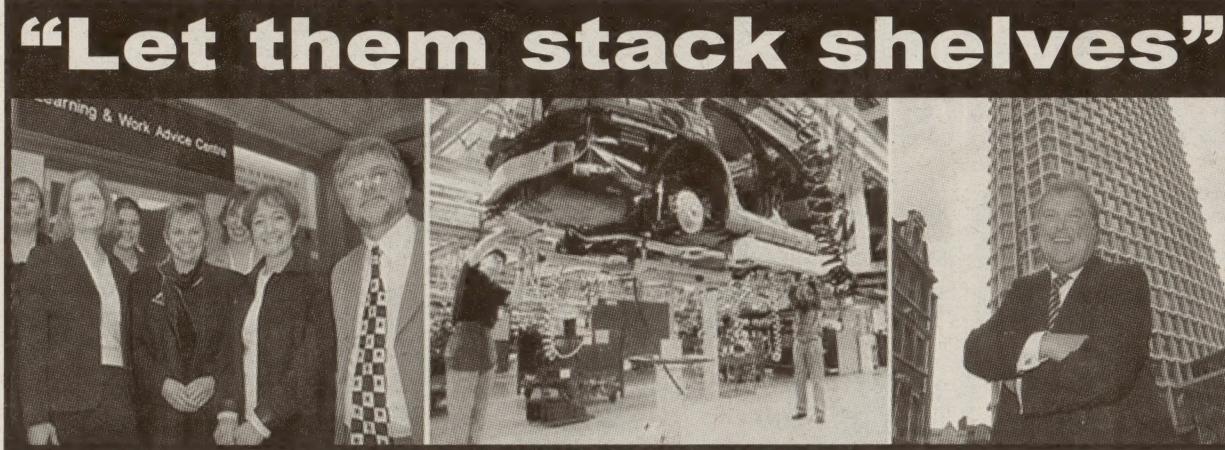

CLARKE: Immigration is not a policy that should be up for public debate.

Prior to May 2001, the British National Party was a tiny, insignificant pressure group but now, because of the party's clear and concise immigration policy, it has become Britain's fourth most popular political party.

It is the ever-increasing numbers of immigrants and asylum seekers that are visible on the streets of Britain that will keep this issue high on the political agenda.

The immigration issue is no longer a taboo topic and is well and truly out in the public domain because the British people can see the ethnic make-up of their towns and cities changing before their very eyes.

For the past thirty years Britons have been cowed into silence and submission over the discussion on immigration. It doesn't matter what extreme or anti-democratic measures Charles Clarke might have in mind, the British people will not be silenced on this issue again.

NATURAL ALLIES: Because New Labour and big business are both committed to the global market, Margaret Hodge (left) and Digby Jones (right) are happy to read the last rites over Britain's manufacturing industry.

Labour tells Rover's skilled workers to get a job at Tesco and big business agrees!

THE Labour Government has received the backing of big business after Margaret Hodge, the Work and Pensions Minister, said that despite the recession in Britain's manufacturing industry, employment was still being created in the service sector.

In an interview with the Wolverhampton newspaper the Express & Star about employment prospects in the West Midlands, she referred to the proposed creation of 350 jobs at a new Tesco store in the Yardley area of Birmingham and was asked whether skilled Rover workers should apply.

She said: "Well, they will work all over the place and there is a new brownfield development site in the West Midlands as well. I am saying that some of the jobs are in Tesco and they will meet the needs of some of the unemployed and people looking for work."

This dispatching of Britain's skilled carmakers to stacking supermarket shelves not surprisingly received the backing of big business. Sir Digby Jones, the director general of the Confederation of British Industry, welcomed flexibility in the labour market, saying:

"Just because you were making cars yesterday does not mean that you can make cars tomorrow."

Both Labour and big business are dedicated to the global market. Globalisation means that all production is moved to Eastern Europe and the Far East to cash in on the abundance of cheap, sweatshop labour available there.

The only role a British workforce has to play in the global market is that of servicing a burgeoning population, and even here British workers, skilled or otherwise, are being replaced by migrant workers flooding into the country.

"The only role a British workforce has to play in the global market is that of servicing a burgeoning population . . ."

A tariff on imports would have saved our shoe industry

ONE HUNDRED and seventy five years of a proud British shoemaking tradition ended when Clarks closed their last significant factory in Britain.

The plant at Dowlish Ford in Somerset has discontinued production with the loss of 70 jobs. The reason behind the closure, was the same for the shutdown of the 13 other major Clarks plants in Britain over the last few years - the company is shifting production to the Far East.

All that is left of the finest 'Made in Britain' tradition that shod generations of British children, is one small plant at Millom in Cumbria, employing just 37 people and this last outpost isn't likely to last much longer.

Clarks have made shoes in Somerset since James and Cyrus Clark founded the shoemaking firm at Street in Somerset in 1825. But not any more. A Clarks spokesman was blunt about why the British shoemakers were shutting down production in Britain: "We have been able to source our shoes cheaper in the Far East."

So from now on Clarks shoes will not be made by British craftsmen with expertise handed down from generations of shoemaking tradition. Now this famous brand name will be made cheaply in China.

This Labour Government is taking Britain to the abyss of total economic ruin, chanting the mindless mantra of Free Trade and letting foreign imports flood into the country.

Only the British National Party would even the odds for our own workers by placing a tariff on

A FINE tradition of innovation loyally supported by a dedicated workforce has been betrayed.

1825: Cyrus and James Clark start a sheepskin slipper business.

1883: Clarks create the first ever shoe to follow the natural shape of the foot.

1950: Clarks launch the Desert boot, first of the famous Originals.

1950s: Clarks process vulcanising rubber soles onto leather uppers.

1960s: Clarks design the world's first comfort shoe, a moccasin.

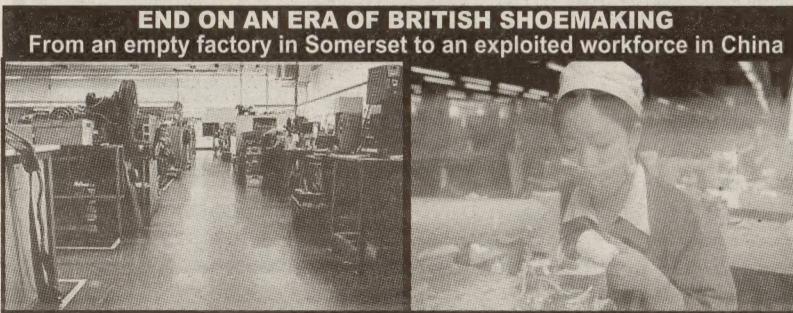

1970s: Clarks use polyurethane (PU) as a soiling material.

1980s: Clarks pioneer the use of 'air comfort' in casual shoes.

1990s: Clarks increases production to meet the needs of a wider range of consumers.

2000: Clarks ditches its British workforce and moves shoe production to the Far East.

imported goods to compensate for the lower costs of sweatshop labour. This would make it just as profitable to go on making British goods, in British factories, using British workers who could compete fairly in our market on quality, rather than unfairly on costs against the exploited workforces of the Third World.

END ON AN ERA OF BRITISH SHOEMAKING

From an empty factory in Somerset to an exploited workforce in China

Empty playgrounds and the lost 50,000 children each year

MANY schools outside of our inner cities are facing closure because of falling pupil numbers due to the shrinking birth rate among young British women.

The consequences of the social change in Britain of the last ten years with the rise of the career woman is being felt most in the school playground, with around 50,000 fewer children expected to enter primary school each year from now until 2007.

Lionel Shriver (above), the winner of the Orange Prize for Womens' Fiction, who herself has no children, gave a timely interview in the Sunday Times on 12th June.

The best-selling author told the paper: "I am well aware it is women like me who are ruining the pension system and the health service because we are not producing people who can pay into it.

"There is something deeply wrong about this notion of living your life for its own sake. You could have one generation without children, that has a wonderful time, going out to restaurants and holidays in France. Then the human race disappears.

"This is something whispered behind closed doors: all the wrong people are having children. Women who are well-educated, with money - you are not supposed to say this - are White, are not reproducing. They have a lot to pass on. I could have passed on a lot and now I won't."

The chilling reality of this lack of reproduction is clinically illustrated in the latest birth-rate figures available, for 2003. These show that each woman in Britain on average has 1.66 children in her lifetime. Well below the 2.1 children per woman required just to keep up our numbers.

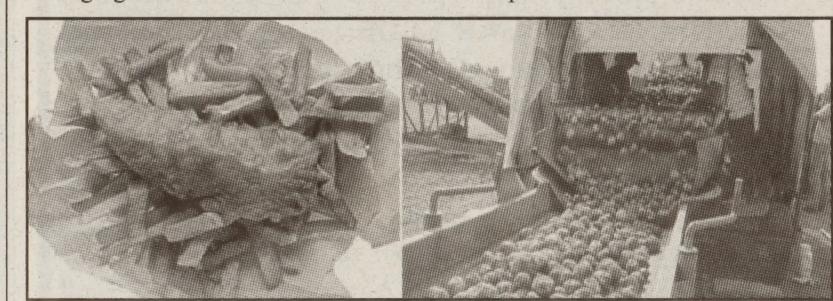

The global average is 2.65 children per woman. Almost every country in Europe is below this, and almost all are well below replacement levels. If this goes on unchecked, the future face of western Europe will change beyond recognition.

As cheap as chips EU-subsidised imports put British potato farmers out of business FOREIGN imports are now even biting into the most basic items of daily life.

Cheap imported chips - the kind you eat with any cod that has not been hoovered up by Spanish and Russian factory ships - are driving British potato processing firms out of business.

In a typical case, Ballymoney Foods in Co. Antrim has just announced it is cutting half its workforce because it is being undercut in local markets by cheap chips shipped in from Belgium and Holland. The company needs to sell 300 tons of chips a week, but thanks to foreign imports are averaging under 200 tons.

IMPORTING UNEMPLOYMENT: Ballymoney Foods is owned by a consortium of 60 Ulster potato farmers. It is cutting half its workforce because it is being undercut by cheap chips shipped in from Belgium and Holland.

Battle lines for next May are drawn as Goresbrook ward returns to Labour

LABOUR VS BNP

Council election showdown 2006

THE Labour Party fought the Goresbrook by-election for Dagenham and Barking Council as though its parliamentary majority depended on it, to overcome a spirited BNP campaign and take back the ward it lost in September of last year.

BNP candidate, Lawrence Rustom, knew that he would be up against it when it was announced that there was an all-party consensus to defeat the British National Party.

The Liberal Democrats and the Green Party agreed to pull out of the contest to give Labour a clear run and the Tories and UK Independence Party both agreed to pour resources into Goresbrook and fight high profile campaigns on the issues of asylum and immigration.

As well as the usual election leaflets from the political parties standing in the contest, all of which attacked the BNP, there were also three other leaflets put out by anti-BNP groups. "Despite this obvious manipulation of the election process, we campaigned hard and were rewarded by comprehensively beating the Tories and UKIP," Lawrence told Freedom.

"Next May, when the whole country goes to the polls, the Tories and UKIP will be concentrating their resources elsewhere leaving only one choice for the voters, Labour or the BNP."

Just how seriously Labour took the campaign was clearly illustrated by MP for Barking, Margaret Hodge, relocating her office from Westminster to Barking and the Home Office minister, Hazel Blears, actually canvassing in the final week.

London Mayor, Ken Livingstone, was given space to attack the BNP in the Dagenham Post on the eve of polling day warning that big business would shun the borough if the BNP maintained its high profile in the area. Mr Livingstone said that the Thames Gateway vision was at risk if the BNP retained their seat.

"There are huge sites in Thames Gateway to fill and people won't want to come if they are seeing a lot of BNP supporters."

"The reason that we get so much investment from abroad is that people think it is a friendly welcoming place. If the British National Party get elected, it will damage that."

This exploitation of the local media is something that concerns BNP London Regional Organiser, Richard Barnbrook, who was the parliamentary candidate in Barking at the General Election.

"This is the second time the Dagenham Post has been used in this way by the Labour Party. Labour feeds a story to the Post who publish it on their front page and then large quantities of the paper are bought by the party and given away free to voters. It's a rather seedy and underhand way of boosting sales while giving authority to Labour Party propaganda.

"I think many people in Barking would be unhappy to know they are being manipulated in this way." Eddy Butler from the British National Party's election department said that the actual BNP vote fell just short of the canvassing returns.

"There was about a 7% slippage which is disappointing but it did not effect the overall result. Our vote was clearly affected by the intensity of both the Tory and UKIP campaigns and some votes were obviously lost to this.

"The deluge of negative media coverage in the last few days also took its toll, but this has the effect of making our supporters just stay at home rather than switching allegiance."

Goresbrook is only the second council ward the BNP has lost and on both occasions it was because councillors resigned shortly after being elected. Voters feel let down when the person they have elected to represent them for up to a three year term fails to stay the course. At the ensuing by-election the political party concerned always gets punished as a result.

British National Party WHERE WE STAND

CRIME: A crack-down on crime with more 'Bobbies on the Beat'. Tougher treatment of criminals, including the return of the death penalty for child killers and terrorists. Zero tolerance for drug-dealers and violent thugs.

IMMIGRATION: An end to immigration and the scandal of bogus asylum seekers flooding Britain. Use the billions now wasted in foreign aid to fund generous 'Homeward Bound' schemes to encourage immigrants to return to their land of ethnic origin.

INDUSTRY: British ownership and control of British industry and resources, including the mass media. Protection of British jobs and industry by selective exclusion of foreign manufactured goods from the British market.

HEALTH: We will use the vast sums of money now wasted on funding our membership of the EU for the restoration of an effective national health service and proactive measures to produce a healthier population in the first place.

EUROPEAN UNION: British withdrawal from the European Union. We will trade with Europe where it benefits Britain, but want no political ties or monetary union.

EDUCATION: A return to traditional methods of education, with stronger discipline in the classroom and an end to 'trendy' teaching methods which have failed our children so badly.

ENVIRONMENT: A healthy environment for a healthy people - the protection of our countryside; a ban on greenfield-site house building except in exceptional cases of genuine local need and an end to field trials of genetically modified crops.

FARMING & FISHING: The regeneration of British farming, with the objective of achieving the maximum self-sufficiency in food. The restoration of the fishing industry through protection of our traditional fishing grounds.

GOVERNMENT & COMMUNITY: The establishment of a government that puts British interests first. A return to healthy moral values and policies aimed at strengthening the family and community. Tough penalties for corruption in public life.

FREEDOM: A massive expansion of freedom and democracy to roll back the erosion of our traditional freedoms and truly reflect the wishes of the people. The adoption of popular referenda and high technology direct democracy.

DEFENCE: An alternative defence strategy based on the principle of armed neutrality. No British blood should be shed in conflicts which do not involve British interests. The restoration of the County Regiment system and the reversal of defence cuts which have weakened our Armed Forces and cost thousands of jobs.

REMEMBER! It doesn't matter if you don't agree with us on every last thing. Like all other democratic political parties, the BNP includes some members who disagree with one or two policies. Just ask yourself whether you agree with more of our policies than those of the other parties. Most people do, which is why we are the fastest growing political party in Britain today.

Education budget stretched CRE want special classes for black boys

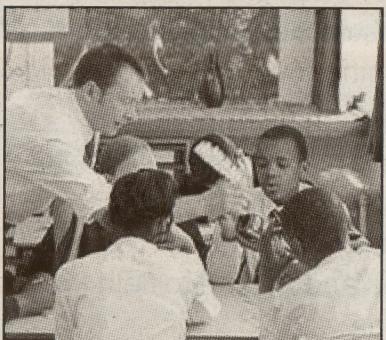

THE country's leading race relations campaigner has called for even more positive discrimination in Britain's schools to help children from ethnic minority backgrounds.

Trevor Phillips, the chairman of the Commission for Racial Equality, now wants boys from an Afro-Caribbean background to be taught separately from the rest of the class to help improve their grades.

The CRE boss said it wasn't enough for do-gooders to bleat about class barriers and white teachers. He said "new solutions" were required:

"The hand-wringing of liberals feels increasingly irrelevant in the face of the accumulating inequalities that are slowly detaching the African-Caribbean community from the rest of society."

On top of the increasing demand for English to be only taught as a second language in schools where immigrants are in the majority, and more calls for the teaching of religions other than Christianity in class, Britain's education budget is being severely stretched.

NOT GUILTY: White teachers are not to blame for the under-achievement of Afro-Caribbean boys.

When racial abuse is just football banter?

A SOCCER tournament to promote racial harmony ended in chaos after the players of one of just two white teams among twenty taking part, left the field after facing a barrage of racial abuse.

The tournament had been organised by Bury's Asian Development Association in partnership with Bury Sports Development as a way of bringing the community together.

But the manager of Forever Bury Football Club said there had been a threatening atmosphere both on and off the pitch.

"My players were called white bastards, and much worse. I was quite worried for their safety."

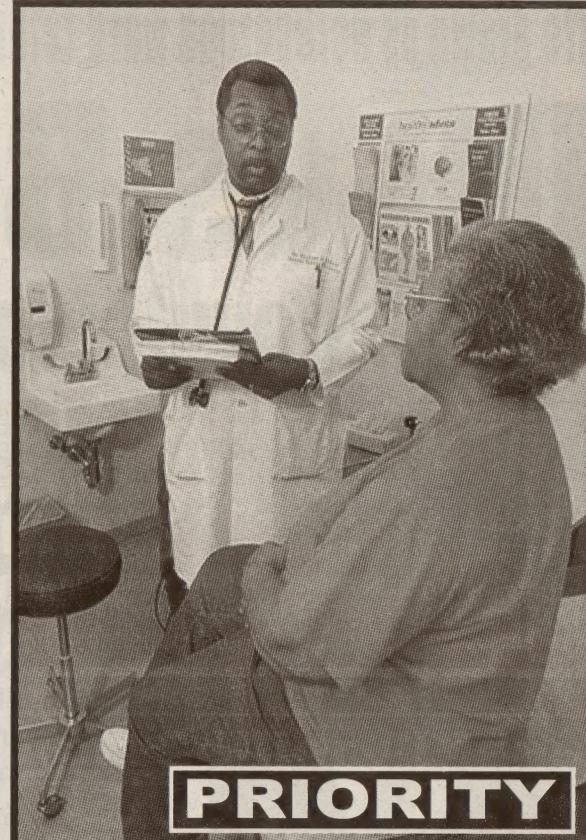

Neil Long, Bury Council's Head of Customer services, dismissed the 'racism' claims as nothing more than "rowdy football banter between spectators".

He said: "It is unfortunate that there was a perception of racial tension."

It's questionable as to whether he would have had such a relaxed attitude had it been the Asian players being abused.

EXPENDABLE

PRIORITY

DISGRACEFUL: As well as encouraging discrimination against the elderly on the grounds of cost effectiveness, the Department of Health has given the green light for NHS Trusts to withhold treatment from the over-65s.

Discrimination is OK - as long as it's against the elderly

by Tina Wingfield

THE GOVERNMENT took hypocrisy to the limits with its pronouncement in April that blatant discrimination against the elderly is an 'appropriate' means of achieving cost effectiveness within health care.

This dismissal of the rights of the most vulnerable section of our society to access medical treatment comes just a month after the unveiling of the Department of Health's Delivering Race Equality strategy designed to eradicate any trace of discrimination within the National Health Service.

The consultation document stating that, in terms of 'rationing' medical treatments offered on the NHS, 'discrimination on the grounds of age is appropriate' was issued by the National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE), one of the many Government-appointed quangos now tying up essential public sector services in bureaucratic knots.

This latest NICE pronouncement follows another recently published guideline declaring that anti-dementia drugs, despite offering a treatment of proven effectiveness for thousands of elderly people and costing just £2.50 per day, were too expensive to be offered on the NHS.

While the Department of Health (DH) encourages discrimination against the elderly, other forms of discrimination more in keeping with Labour's politically correct regime are made the subject of legal sanction. In the same document which gives the green light for NHS Trusts to withhold treatment from the over-65s, it rules that there is, in contrast, no case for discrimination on the grounds of lifestyle, sexuality or race.

Indeed, the right of black and minority ethnic groups to be protected from both deliberate and inadvertent discrimination within public sector services was recently enshrined within Race Relations law.

This amendment places a legal duty on public authorities to promote equality of opportunity in terms of race and, to ensure that local authorities deliver on this, the DH has set achievement targets, backed up with protected NHS funding.

These equal opportunities targets include the development of 'culturally sensitive' initiatives, such as the recruitment of 500 community development workers, described by a DH spokesperson as 'a new kind of healthcare professional on the ground to support black and minority ethnic (BME) communities and make sure their views are heard.'

"Dare any one of this new group of second class citizens to request an ethnically 'standard' environment and wait for the uproar!"

Active steps will also be taken to recruit, retain and promote BME staff so that any requests by BME patients to be treated 'in a more ethnically mixed environment' (newspeak for a preference to be looked after amongst one's own people with whom a common language and culture is shared) can be met.

So while the views of some sections of our society are amplified and their preferences catered for, who now speaks for the elderly? Dare any one of this new group of second class citizens to request an ethnically 'standard' environment and wait for the uproar!

Preference be damned, this Labour Government deems that the very people who created and sustained the National Health Service through years of national insurance contributions are no longer automatically entitled to even the most basic of medical treatments.

DOUBLE STANDARDS: The Government has no cost effectiveness concerns when publishing its extensive and expensive guidelines to look after the interests of Britain's ethnic minorities.

Asians only arthritis therapy

A HUDDERSFIELD woman suffering from arthritis was refused therapy because she wasn't an Asian.

Jane Woodage, who has suffered from arthritis and rheumatism since 1987, applied to attend hydrotherapy sessions to help relieve her symptoms at the Trinity Centre in Huddersfield, when the special cut-price courses were advertised.

But she was told that non-Asians were excluded from the sessions because of lottery funding stipulations.

A spokeswoman from Kirklees Social Services explained to Jane:

"The funding for this initiative comes from the lottery's New Opportunities Healthy Living Grant and was specifically for the Asian community."

Lotto says 'No' because village is too white

A VILLAGE in Cheshire has been refused lottery funding for a community centre because it has too many white people.

Residents of Cuddington, near Northwich, wanted the centre to replace the football club's dilapidated prefab changing rooms and the run-down hut used by the youth club, girl guides and scouts.

When they applied for help from the National Lottery they met all the criteria bar one. They were refused a grant because there was "not sufficient ethnic community mix in the village".

The reality of Britain today is that British people in places like Cuddington are being discriminated against simply because they are white.

Seaside specials

THE mayor of Middlesbrough, Ray Mallon, wants Teesside council taxpayers to fund outings to the seaside for Muslim pensioners. Mallon says the trips will increase social inclusion of elderly Muslims in the town because many of them do not drive and stay in their community because, "they have scars from past racism."

Call centre staff sent to India to train replacements

CALL centre staff in Preston in Lancashire have been sent to Bangalore in India to train the people who will be taking over their jobs.

Fifty workers at British Telecom's Telephone House in the town have been made redundant but nine of them have been told they can extend their contracts by going to India and training their replacements.

BANGALORE: Has workers able to live on less than one-seventh of the average British call-centre wage.

Three years ago the BT headquarters in Walker Street had 500 employees but now that is down to 90 because all the jobs in sales, billing, customer relations and technical support have been exported to India.

Beverley Jones, the British National Party's North West regional organiser said that the exporting of Preston jobs to India was a scandal.

"In another 12 months there won't be any BT jobs left at Telephone House. BT have just opened their second call-centre in India where they are paying their workers £2,000 a year, when in Preston, staff were on £15,000."

"The CWU should be calling for an immediate strike to protect British jobs, but all they can do is wring their hands and bleat pathetically that there's nothing they can do about it."

Race relations before health and safety

BRITISH workers at the Kerrgold factory in Leek in Staffordshire are concerned over the increasing use of cheap migrant labour by the company.

But the Brits are wary of taking their worries to the management for fear of being branded racist.

One worker was put on report for refusing to work with an Iraqi asylum seeker. She told management that it was nothing to do with racial prejudice but that he wasn't following health and safety guidelines which was putting her in serious danger.

At first the management said they would re-train the man, but then back-tracked after an approach by a race relations adviser. They then decided that the complaint from the lady concerned was racially motivated and issued her with a warning.

Globalisation is heading for disaster warns top investor

by Steve Johnson

WARREN BUFFETT is generally regarded as the World's most successful investor. Since 1965, he and his deputy, Charlie Munger, have built their Berkshire Hathaway investment empire into the king of the global Stock Market sharks, returning investors a world-beating average of 26% a year on their money.

So with the Buffett-Munger empire currently owning 8% of Coca-Cola, 12.1% of American Express and 18.1% of the Washington Post, as well as Fruit of the Loom clothing, Acme building products and insurers General Re and Geico, you would have expected the Berkshire Hathaway annual shareholders meeting on April 30th in Omaha, Nebraska to be a celebration of global capitalism.

But you would have been wrong, for both Buffett and Munger used the occasion to warn that the international capitalism system is in very serious trouble and it may well bring Western Civilization down with it.

The World's two top Stock Market investors are echoing the warnings that the British National Party have been issuing for years of a decadent West, rendered blind by greed and helpless by globalisation in the face of the economic growth of China and the Far East.

BERKSHIRE HATHAWAY: A company that has made a fortune for investors.

GLOBAL INVESTORS: Charlie Munger and Warren Buffett are now echoing warnings consistently raised by the British National Party.

Warren Buffett warned that the West was keeping itself going only by selling off the family silverware to the likes of the Chinese.

"We are consuming more than we bring in. So we sell off a piece of the farm. We trade away a bit of the farm every day and the rest of the world is happy to buy it. That can go on for a long time but our children will be paying for it one way or another".

Charlie Munger was much blunter: "It's quite conceivable that China will end up being the most important nation in the world", he warned, contrasting Chinese hard work, discipline and patriotism with the "lazy and decadent" West.

Both men warned that the speed with which money can now be moved electronically around the world by what Munger called "the electronic herd" of hedge-fund managers, a key part of globalisation, was a disaster waiting to happen, since any financial crisis, real or perceived, could spiral very rapidly out of control.

Buffett and Munger aren't the only top capitalists worried. William Lewis, Business Editor of the Sunday Times, in his column on May 8th, warned:

"The reason why British and American business has long-term worries is China. That's where cars, telecoms equipment and almost everything else is going to be made, and it's rightly scaring business here."

The top financial journalist also revealed that "the billionaire owner of one of Britain's biggest consumer groups tells me he is so concerned that he has cashed in all his equity and property investments. 'The party is over, reality is coming,' he says". Charlie Munger, 81, and for decades the deputy head of the World's most successful stock market investment group, left his audience in Nebraska with these chilling words: The past 60 years have been the best years for Western Civilization. My generation has been very favoured. I find it quite unlikely that the next 60 years will be so favourable".

The British National Party is the only political party to have consistently warned that the economic system of Capitalism, International Finance, Globalisation and Money Power is heading for a colossal collapse.

It is a collapse which could bring down with it Western Civilization and the peoples who built it, unless the countries of the West abandon the global economy and return to an economic policy where self-sufficiency and national interests are put before profits.

Increase immigration or Bangladeshi restaurants will close

BANGLADESHI restaurant bosses based in Britain have warned the Government about a shortage of catering staff.

They claim that restaurants will start to close unless more workers are brought into the country from Bangladesh.

Kazi Ashadur Rahman from the Bangladesh Caterers' Association said that Bangladeshis already living in Britain didn't want to work in the catering trade. He called for increased immigration quotas from Bangladesh to be sanctioned by the Government in order to allow in more migrant workers prepared to work in their restaurants.

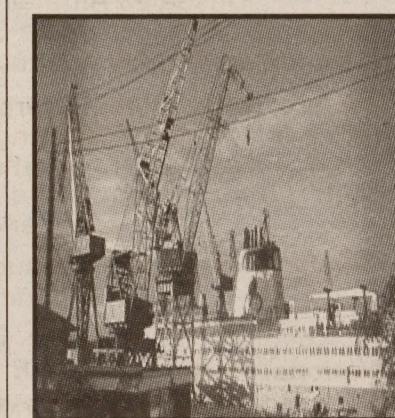

Migrant labour used to undercut shipyard workers

STRUGGLING Hebburn shipyard SA & P Tyne has won three short-term contracts from Norway to keep its workforce busy for at least another six weeks.

But few Tyneside shipworkers will be celebrating the news as the company is using contract labour on site, many of whom are migrant workers from Poland brought in to undercut the local workforce.

"It's a sorry state of affairs," one A & P employee emailed Freedom:

"Seventy-two workers were laid off when the company mothballed its Wallsend yard last year, but instead of signing them up the company is using cheap imported Polish labour. What makes this even more unpalatable is that it is Polish shipyards undercutting British shipyards for defence contracts and that has helped destroy Britain's shipbuilding industry."

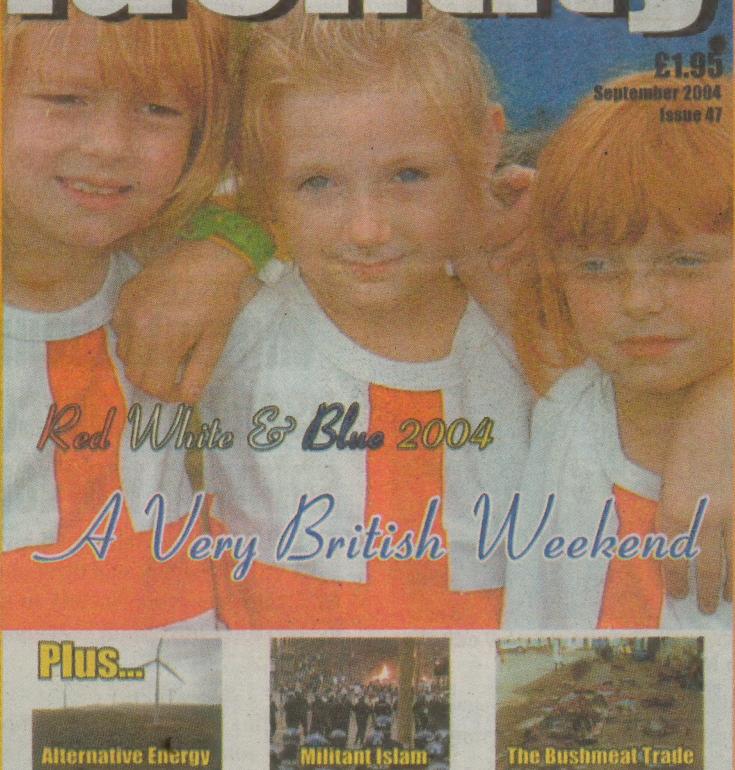

A & P TYNE: Migrant labour used in preference to local workers.

STARS OF THE SHOW

Fund-raising barbecue for Arthur Redfearn

by Mark Reed

A fund-raising barbecue was held on Saturday 29th May to help with the legal expenses of Bradford British National Party councillor, Arthur Redfearn, who is contesting what will be a landmark appeal case in London following his sacking on health and safety grounds for his "own good" from the company where he was employed as a driver.

There was over 4 hours of live entertainment from many artists playing traditional British folk music from England, Scotland, Ireland and Wales, with 'top-of-the-bill' Dave Hannam giving one of his best performances.

The barbecue, which had a real family friendly feel with the oldest in attendance 81 years old and the youngest just 5 weeks, took place in beautiful countryside provided by a BNP well-wisher.

The evening was rounded off with a spectacular firework display and what many will see as a rare highlight, a duet from party chairman, Nick Griffin and Yorkshire organiser, Nick Cass, which brought a great end to a memorable evening.

* Watch out for the BNP TV production of the event which will feature many of the artists who played to raise funds for Arthur Redfearn.

Suspended from work for not being a BNP candidate

A PRIMARY Care Health Worker from Cumbria was suspended from work after it was reported in a local newspaper that she wouldn't be standing for the British National Party in Carlisle at the General Election.

Mother of three, Tina Wingfield, 38, was the BNP's prospective parliamentary candidate for Carlisle but was unable to stand because the party's vote in the constituency at the European Elections was 5% and below the 10% threshold required for the General Election.

"In Britain today a section of the community is being persecuted because we do not conform to the stereotype our current political masters insist we should."

Health worker, Tina Wingfield

Tina worked for the North Cumbria NHS Trust in Carlisle as a graduate mental health worker, but a week after the report appeared in the local News and Star evening newspaper she was told that she was suspended from her job pending an internal enquiry.

After nearly three months of investigations the Trust found "no evidence of unprofessional behaviour and as a result will not be taking any disciplinary action."

But they did inform Tina that the post she had been employed in had been discontinued and they were unable to offer her suitable alternative employment.

Tina Wingfield told Freedom: "In Britain today a section of the community is being persecuted because we do not conform to the stereotype our current political masters insist we should.

"Hopefully a civil liberties or human rights group will see this vilification of people, who are members of a legal political party that is being ludicrously misrepresented by our opponents, and speak out against this injustice.

"The bottom line is that if the newspaper had reported I had intended to stand for Labour, the Lib-Dems, the Tories, the Green, UKIP or the Socialist Workers Party, I would still be in my job."

The true face of the BNP

MISREPRESENTED: The BBC claimed that the BNP demonstration at Leeds Crown Court was 'skinheads draped in union jacks'. The reality was that the demonstrators came from a cross-section of British society appalled at the continued persecution of the British National Party.

Support at court for Nick & Mark

BRITISH National Party chairman, Nick Griffin, and BNP Advisory Council member, Mark Collett, appeared at Leeds Magistrates Court on June 16th for a formal committal hearing in connection with alleged offences under Britain's draconian race relations legislation.

Nick and Mark were charged by West Yorkshire Police in April after a special team of officers had spent 8 months trawling through unpublished footage secretly filmed for the BBC documentary 'The Secret Agent'.

More than 100 BNP supporters demonstrated outside the court in support of freedom and gave the defendants a huge cheer when they arrived for the hearing. There was a sympathetic response from drivers and pedestrians alike in the city centre with many tooting horns or stopping to shake hands with the demonstration and pass on words of support.

Nick and Mark were bailed to appear at Leeds Crown Court on Thursday July 21st.

Grey Squirrels

Unwanted import destroying our countryside

Calling time on the US tree rat be eclipsed from Britain.

- Grey squirrels also attack Britain's bird population by destroying nests and eating the eggs and the young chicks.
- Grey squirrels are extremely destructive in woodlands, stripping

BESIEGED: Red squirrels are being pushed out by the fast breeding grey.

ABOVE: Bark stripping by grey squirrels hinders Britain's woodland conservation and threatens our timber industry.

bark from the main stem and branches of trees. The impact of grey squirrels on our woodland is a threat to future conservation, bio-diversity and sustainability.

● Grey squirrels are harming Britain's timber industry because they target trees such as beech, oak and pine. Their bark stripping reduces timber quality through staining (due to fungal infection) and structural defects which ultimately reduces timber value and yield. Weakened stems may break and trees that are ring-barked will die from that point up.

The public must be educated as to the threat posed by this American tree rat so that they will support the call for a nationwide cull in order to protect an essential part of Britain's heritage.

WHEN THE first grey squirrels were brought to Britain from America in 1876 to provide a tourist attraction for Cheshire's parks and country houses, no one could have envisaged the destruction they would cause.

The new arrival was much larger (average weight 550 grams), stronger and more adaptable than our native red squirrel (average weight 300 grams) and in just a matter of years was starting to take over its habitat. But this wasn't achieved by direct confrontation with the red squirrel but through a virus, parapox, which it brought to Britain. While the disease didn't harm the carrier, parapox in red squirrels caused skin ulcers, lesions and scabs with swelling and discharge around the eyes, mouth and feet. The animals became unable to move and get food and died within just 15 days of coming into contact with the virus.

Over a century of relentless expansion now sees the grey squirrel numbers at 2 million while the red squirrel is down to just 30,000, surviving only in parts of Scotland, Cumbria, Northumberland and the Isle of Wight. Most experts give the red only another 10 years before it is completely wiped out from the UK. Pushing the red squirrel towards extinction in the UK is not the only reason why this tree rat from the United States needs to

We must give Christianity pride of place

THERE were two reports in my local paper last week which paint a sorry picture of the state of our Christian religion in this country today. The contempt in which the establishment holds Christianity is now permeating through our society.

A local Unitarian Church is being repeatedly targeted by vandals. They have set it on fire, dumped rubbish in the porch, broken the stained glass windows with stones and used the graveyard as a drinking den. There is very little that the Church can do against this onslaught because it is not possible to secure its boundaries.

One of Medway's most beautiful old churches faces closure because the roof on the Grade 1 listed building, which dates from the 13th century, needs to be replaced and unless £1 million can be found to replace it, the church will have to hold its services elsewhere.

The congregation numbers approximately 300 members and as the vicar surveyed his flock of mainly pensioners and those with young families he must have realised with a sinking heart that it would certainly need more than prayers to fulfil any hopes of reaching this target. One pensioner did come forward with a cheque for £25.

But it seems that the problems faced by our Christian faith are way down this Government's list of priorities.

The increasing demands of Britain's Islamic community for more mosques to house its burgeoning ranks of worshippers have been well documented within these pages and the Government's enthusiastic to meet these demands leaves one to ponder if other religions continue to expand at such a rate will this over-crowded island of ours be able to accommodate them.

Yet all the while our own religious buildings continue to be treated with disrespect and allowed to fall into disrepair. It appears that only the British National Party is prepared to speak out and call for Christianity, our faith, to be given the priority of place in our society that it rightly deserves.

Just issue postal votes for the elderly and infirm

JUDGE Richard Mawrey's damning report on the postal vote debacle in Birmingham only confirms what many have long suspected - that the voting system in this country is neither free nor fair.

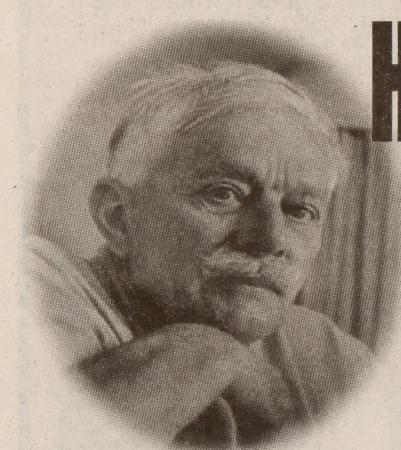

The Government has treated this scandal with its usual disdain and arrogance, fobbing the public off with the claim that fraud is not widespread despite there being similar court cases waiting to be heard. The Labour Party's defence of postal voting is pitiful. They say it increases voter participation, but what is the point of that if those extra votes from previously non-participating voters are counterbalanced by sackfuls of fraudulent ballot papers?

The Electoral Commission seems completely ineffective. It has an advisory role and when the Government chooses to ignore its advice it does nothing. The Commission was supposed to build public confidence in the electoral process, but it has failed miserably. Once the Government ignored its advice, the members of the Commission should have resigned en bloc to draw the public's attention to this attack on our democracy.

The BNP didn't stand in my constituency at the General Election but I know for sure that if they had done I would have been prepared to walk miles in order to cast my vote for the party.

People who are not prepared to walk the few hundred yards to the local polling station to cast their vote don't deserve one. Postal voting should only be for the elderly and the infirm.

Helping to educate the public about the true philosophy of the BNP

by John Roberts

THE writer, Henry Williamson (1895-1977), who had over 50 books published, was a soldier, a farmer, a visionary and above all a nationalist.

He is best known for his unsentimental and enthralling tales of our countryside epitomised in Tarka the Otter and Salar the Salmon, so it is often overlooked that Henry Williamson also wrote books like The Wet Flanders Plain and The Patriot's Progress, which recounted his experiences in the trenches during the Great War.

He also recorded a social history of Great Britain in his The Village Books, The Flax of Dream and the 15 volumes of his finest work A Chronicle of Ancient Sunlight.

Initially, he was a regular broadcaster on the BBC with his Green Fields and Pavements talks, including The Hopeful Traveller, attracting huge audiences who enjoyed listening to his passionate campaigning for Britain's 'land and people'. But gradually he was sidelined as his call for national self-sufficiency and warnings of the destructive nature of globalisation became out of step with the liberal left's growing influence during the 1960s.

In later life, Henry Williamson became disenchanted with politics as there was no political party in Britain with which he could feel comfortable. I would like to believe that he might have felt at home with the British National Party.

The media and chattering classes like to portray the BNP as a negative force, yet the General Election clearly showed that it was the other three parties which campaigned by playing on people's fears.

We must show ourselves as a positive and realistic alternative to the stagnant global-dictated political parties of today, and the writings of Henry Williamson have an important role to play in educating the public as to the true philosophy of the British National Party.

COMPLETE WORK: Published in 1998, this A Patriot's Progress records Henry Williamson's service in WW1 through his letters home and diary.

Importing the bird flu virus from China

POULTRY feathers imported from China to make pillows could carry the bird flu virus.

To try to stop the disease coming to Britain the Government has banned imports of poultry meat from the Far East, but duck, chicken and turkey feathers are still entering the country.

According to experts the virus survives in faecal material on the feathers.

What a state of affairs it has come to when this country, once a nation of farmers as well as builders of industry, ends up having to import feathers - which may well cause the deaths of tens of thousands of our folk - from a communist dictatorship half way around the world.

£15 million BBC propaganda

THE BBC season of programmes devoted to Africa has cost British licence fee payers £15 million.

The Corporation admitted that the 45 hours of pro-African programming was to redress the public's negative perception about the continent concerning foreign aid and birthrate. The feel-good-about-Africa propaganda included special episodes of Holby City, Come Dancing, Ground Force, and a drama about the G8 summit. BBC News, which recently broadcast from China for a week, also came in part live from Africa along with a special edition of Question Time.

BNP campaign for a Miners' Memorial Day

NO ONE knows how many men and boys have died doing their duty for their country in our coal mines. 90,000 died in mine disasters alone in the sixty years before WW1, and including coal dust related diseases such as chronic bronchitis and pneumoconiosis the total casualty figure is well over a million. This Labour Government have just given the police their own Police Memorial Day for officers killed in the line of duty, and the British National Party believes that there should also be a Miners' Memorial Day. There needs to be a specific day for a special occasion when the country remembers all those miners who gave their lives miles under the ground, hewing out the coal that was the vital energy source in Britain of the nineteenth and twentieth century.

'Lady in red . . . ?'

Not any more as TUC bans the 'L' word

INSTEAD OF safeguarding British jobs from being off-shored to Eastern Europe and the Far East, the Trade Union Congress is spending its time and its members' money censoring the British language so that it doesn't cause offence to minorities.

The latest word to be 'blacklisted' in the TUC document Diversity in Action is 'lady'. The guide says: "The term 'lady' is not accepted and should not generally be used." This is because it is regarded as too feminine and might upset lesbians.

SHE'S A LADY: Classic songs face the cold-shoulder because lesbians find the term 'lady' offensive.

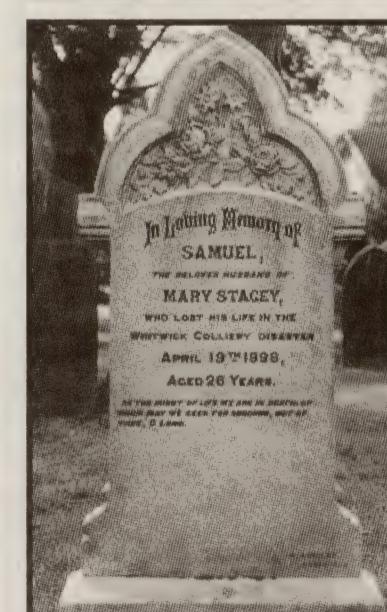

The TUC also warns that while it is acceptable to use 'black' to describe colour, as in blackboard, black coffee and black bin bag, terms such as black sheep, blacklist, black mark and black looks, although not linked to skin colour, reinforce a negative view of all things black.

Responding to complaints from trade unionists that the new guidelines were political correctness gone mad, a TUC spokesman said:

"The term political correctness in itself now has too many negative connotations. We prefer professional appropriateness."

Labour crook

A LABOUR councillor has been jailed for 10 months for stealing thousands of pounds intended for the upkeep of his own neighbourhood. Tony Giles, 50, who represented Ravensbury ward on Merton Council abused his position as chairman of the West Barnes Lane Tenants by stealing £18,000 of public money. The money should have been used for caretaking, cleaning and grounds maintenance for the 422-home estate.

REMEMBERED: Samuel Stacey, age 26 from the Dumps in Whitwick, worked as stallman in No.5 shaft. One of the victims of the Whitwick Colliery Disaster who left a wife and two children.

The Whitwick Colliery Disaster

When Charlie Clamp went back for his colleagues

IN THE early hours of Tuesday morning, April 19th 1898, there were 42 men working down Shaft No. 5 at the Whitwick Colliery.

No. 5 was a dry and dusty pit, shored up by plenty of timber along the sides of the main intake road which ran for a mile at a depth of 750 feet to the main coal seam. Deputy Joseph Limb discovered the fire while making his rounds, raised the alarm and managed to escape along with seven others through the return airway but 34 men were trapped behind the fire.

Hundreds of people gathered above the mine as the news spread about the incident and many rescue attempts were made. But the miners were trapped and could not be reached.

Miner Charles Clamp, volunteered to return to the fumes and smoke to try to lead his fellow colliers to safety but he too was to perish bringing the death toll to 35.

Amongst the victims was 13 year-old Albert Gee who had worked in the pit as a pony driver, his little body was found alongside his pony. The remains of another eight close friends who were devout Christians and often prayed together, were found huddled together in a ring, with their arms around each other's necks. The oldest miner to lose his life was 63 year-old William Bradshaw whose body was never found.

CHARLES CLAMP: He died after returning to the fumes and smoke to try to save his fellow colliers.

An official verdict was passed declaring that the men who had died, or were still missing presumed dead, had died of carbon monoxide poisoning from a fire in number five pit which had begun in faulty strata. All access roads to the workings were then sealed cutting off air to the fire. A plaque was erected in Christ Church, Coalville, to the memory of the 35 men who had died in the disaster. It also makes note that the men left behind 27 widows and 84 children under the age of 13.

WAITING FOR NEWS: Wives and children, mothers and fathers gather at the colliery after news of the disaster spread through the town.

The terrorist attack on London

by Nick Griffin

"Islam is a religion of Peace." How many times have you heard that since the 7/7 London Massacre? Journalists and politicians have queued up to claim that the Koran preaches that:

"... whoever kills a soul is like one who has killed the whole of mankind; and whoever saves a life is like one who saves the lives of all mankind."

The trouble is that it doesn't. What the verse (Chapter 5 verse 32) really says is:

"... whoever kills a soul, not in retaliation for a soul or corruption in the land, is like one who has killed the whole of mankind; and whoever saves a life is like one who saves the lives of all mankind."

The truth is that this misquoted verse doesn't tell Muslims not to kill, but openly allows – even commands – them to kill, for two separate reasons which between them offer plenty of scope for those who want to 'justify' murder:

First, "in retaliation for a soul". Put yourself for one moment in the shoes of a Muslim who regards (as vast numbers of them do) Blair's illegal invasion of Iraq, and the mass slaughter of civilians that has gone with it, as murder. Straight away, blowing up the Number 30 bus is 'justified' according to the very verse that the politicians and media use to try to prove that the London Massacre was "unIslamic".

Second, "or corruption in the land". Again, it is clear to anyone with any knowledge of Islam that all sorts of things that go on in Britain can be regarded by mainstream Muslims as "corruption in the land." Banks lending money at interest (bang, there goes the NatWest tower); homosexuality (bang, there goes Scotland Yard, thanks to the absurd Camp Commander Paddick, who clearly can't distinguish between his unread copy of the Koran and his well-thumbed copy of Gay Times); pretty girls in short-sleeved summer tops (bang, there go the restaurants and clubs); people making laws on the basis of humanity and reason, rather than on the often contradictory recommendations of the Koran (bang, there go the Houses of Parliament and our democracy); alcohol (bang, there goes your local).

All sorts of things that, for good or ill, we take for granted, spell "corruption" not just to the "extremists" but to every genuine Muslim on the planet. Far from being "unIslamic", terrorist attacks on targets in Britain are 'legitimised' by the Koran.

Furthermore, they are particularly favoured by the stern version of Islam preached by the Wahhabi sect that dominates Saudi Arabia. And it is from Saudi Arabia that most of the money comes to pay for the opening of one new mosque every week in Britain.

Instead of telling lies about "peaceful Islam", the Government should be closing down the mosques which are funded by these Middle Eastern fanatics. They are the places where the next generation of home-grown suicide bombers are being recruited. If Blair & Co really cared about Britain, then rooting out this pro-terror fifth column in our midst would be their first move.

BRANCH MEETING: Chris Roberts, the British National Party candidate for Upminster at the General Election, reports on his campaign and the progress the party is making in Essex to the June meeting of Thurrock BNP.

It's all about profits

A NEIGHBOUR of mine went to a local poultry factory looking for a job but they said there were no vacancies. They didn't even take his details for future reference in case something became available.

You can imagine how he felt when days later our local Citizen newspaper reported that the factory in question, G.W. Padleys, had just taken on FIFTY "badly-needed migrant workers" from the European Union.

The company, which had recently been taken over by Chicago-based international food group, OSI, claimed that they were "not taking work away from local people and working for the local good of the community".

What hypocrisy. The reality is that they don't care about the local workforce, they are just interested in getting the cheapest workforce so that they can make bigger profits.

Calling WW2 veterans

IT IS important that any BNP members who are World War II veterans get a badge they are entitled to and a presentation certificate from the Veterans Agency. Office hours are 8.15 am to 5.15 pm and there is a freephone number to contact: 0800 169 2277.

The applicant will be asked to give his name and address, date of birth, wartime service number, service period and theatre of war served in. The badge is something BNP veterans should wear at all BNP occasions to help improve the image of the party in the eyes of the public.

Hate on hand-outs

I FIND it strange that Nick Griffin can face charges under our race relations laws over comments made at a private meeting.

Yet all the while, the mad mullah of Tottenham, Omar Bakri, can openly call for a holy war and the murder of non-Muslims on his website and is still free to collect his social security cheque from the taxpayer.

Another example of the PC lunatics having taken over the asylum.

To whom do we complain?

IT WOULD appear that qualifications, ability and suitability are of secondary consideration to race and sexual preference when applying for a job.

A recent report that the Metropolitan Police are only considering applications for employment from ethnic minorities is further proof of this.

Surely it is racial discrimination to exclude members of the indigenous population in this way.

But to whom do we complain? The only publicly-funded body concerned with race relations is the Commission for Racial Equality and they, more than any other organisation, have discriminated against the British people.

Ireland and the Union

I WAS very pleased to see that the Trafalgar Club alluded to the entire British Isles, including Ireland, in its latest bulletin.

There are many people living south of the border who wish to see Ireland rejoin the Union and it is reassuring to know that the British National Party hasn't forgotten about us.

For generations, the silent majority – silenced by republican terrorists and extremist politicians – have realised that a union between Ireland and Great Britain is the only way to a secure future.

John Leary, Dublin.

VE Day in Birmingham

I WAS very pleased to play my small part in the recent VE parade in Birmingham.

The day began with a wreath laying ceremony at the Hall of Memory, followed by a two minute silence. We then marched from Victoria Square to St Philip's Cathedral for a service of commemoration.

It was during the service that I thought back to the comrades I left behind in the western Desert, Italy and France. I am certain that these brave and gallant men would now be standing shoulder to shoulder with me and the BNP and once again fighting for Britain.

The motto of my old regiment, the Irish Guards, was "Quis Separabit" – Who Shall Separate Us and I think this pretty well sums it up for the British National Party and its ever-increasing membership – who shall separate us?

Patrick O'Sullivan, Birmingham

Stunt for the media

THE latest Government crime initiative is to ban the wearing of hoods in shopping centres and it's just another stunt dreamed up by New Labour for the media.

It will all be quietly forgotten, just like their last 'tackling the causes of crime' media stunt, that of marching yobs to the nearest cashpoint machines to pay instant fines.

Besides, many will see the banning of hoods in shopping centres as a breach of human rights, particularly as women in burkas will no longer be able to shop there.

Train our own doctors

APPARENTLY there are 2,600 German doctors regularly commuting to Britain to cover for NHS doctors who are refusing to work evenings and weekends.

It is stories like this that just confirm my worse fears about our Health Service, and that a radical shake-up is required before it collapses completely.

Britain must begin a massive programme of training for both doctors and nurses, and it must be on the clear understanding that once graduated, students have a duty to work only for the NHS and cover any weekend and evening hours included in their contract.

Election broadcast that changed the public's perception of the BNP

Corporal Fox

My God, it was cold in the Falklands!
When the stars and the flares shone out clear,
But at least I had mates to share jokes with
It's much colder and lonelier here.
And that sharp piece of Argentine shrapnel
It's hurt me for many a year
But not like when you look straight through me
Pretending I'm not even here.

My God, we were thirsty in Kuwait
And choking in dust we went dry
But we shed a few tears for our Gary
When a mine took his legs and he died
And knowing the next step could kill me
I thought it had taught me of fear
Til I see how you look straight through me
Pretending I'm not even here.

My God, I was angry to hear it
When 'home' from the army I came:
There were flats for Iraqis and Afghans
But never a one with my name.
I thought that the council would sort it
Til a desk clerk with spiky green hair
Said "next please" and looked straight through me
Pretending I just wasn't there.

So I swear and I curse and I mutter
Though the anger is mainly inside
Without hope there's no disappointment
There's no one out there on my side.
I know the White Lightning will kill me
Don't you see that I really don't care?
It helps me to look straight through you
And pretend that I'm not quite all there.

So I live where the police cars can't see me
In my rags and my old cardboard box
And there's no one would notice me vanish
Except for my mate, Corporal Fox.
Two broken old squaddies together
In winter we share the same lair.
And I bring him some bones from our Colonel
So he doesn't pretend I'm not there.

THE British National Party's General Election broadcast was a watershed in the history of nationalist politics in the United Kingdom. Many thousands of our traditional supporters, anticipating the usual tirade against immigration, were perhaps left a little bemused by the musical offering and the images of a down-and-out ex-serviceman scavenging rubbish bins in London. But thousands of other viewers, who previously wouldn't have given the BNP broadcast more than a cursory glance, were moved enough by the production to contact the party, leading to "an explosion of calls and emails" to our information desks.

The song Corporal Fox was written by BNP chairman, Nick Griffin, who was recalling an early childhood memory of seeing a bearded tramp with a fox on a lead. In many cases these 'Gentlemen of the Road' in the early 1960's were veterans of the WW2 and as things haven't changed today, Nick wanted to draw attention to the scandal of old soldiers still left without a home in the country they fought for.

"I only wrote the words," he told Freedom. "Dave Hannam did the real work by coming up with such a superb tune. He's already sung it in several northern folk clubs and tells me that it has gone down very well."

To hold on to our new elevated position as Britain's fourth political party, we need to keep growing and bring into our ranks new people with the expertise on a wide range of issues that will show that only nationalism has the answer to the problems our nation faces. To achieve this media stereotypes of the BNP must be dispelled and our 2005 General Election broadcast went some way towards doing this.

Just 60 votes short of beating Labour in Morley

THE size of the British National Party's vote was the talking point of all the post election analysis after a council election in Morley. The Yorkshire Post headlined their report on the Topcliffe ward election under a banner, 'By-election winner tells of relief at seeing off his BNP opponent' and quoted winning Labour Party candidate, Joe Medley, as saying: "I'm really delighted that we beat the BNP and I have to admit, I did see them as a threat. The fact the BNP came second is worrying though."

DELIGHTED: Chris Beverley polled 33% in Topcliffe ward, Morley.

Morley Council is run by a group of Independent councillors (MBI), so the fact that our candidate, Chris Beverley, was able to push the Independent into third place with nearly 100 more votes shows that the BNP are now emerging as the main challengers to Labour. Freedom editor, Martin Wingfield, who acted as a teller on polling day, likened the Morley election to the early BNP elections in Burnley.

"Five years ago the Independents were a major force in Burnley but once the BNP started to make an impact, voters saw us as the opposition to Labour and the Independent vote collapsed. I can see this happening in Morley."

Chris Beverley was not only very pleased with the result, but also with the spin-offs from the campaign.

"A major benefit of this election is that we are now in contact with dozens of enthusiastic new supporters.

"We also have hundreds more canvassed 'yes' voters, who will now be added to our monthly paper round in the town selling Freedom."

Annual audit visits Burnley

THE British National Party's treasurer, John Walker, paid a visit to the BNP's office in Burnley at the beginning of June as part of his tour of the country preparing the party's regional accounts for the auditor and Electoral Commission.

"I'm delighted to report that so far everything I have seen is in order", John told Freedom.

BNP election debut in West Sussex

DR. ANDREW EMERSON: Former Labour Party candidate, now BNP.

NOWADAYS it's not often that when a BNP candidate polls just 6% of the vote, the result is described as 'promising'.

But that was the verdict when a former Labour Party candidate, Dr. Andrew Emerson, stood for the BNP in Chichester.

The result was a disappointment for UKIP, however, which saw their share of the vote plummet from 17% to 7% in one of their 'flagship' areas.

BNP beat the Tories in Walsall

KEVIN Smith, the British National Party candidate for the Darlaston South by-election, polled 18% and beat the Tories in the contest for Walsall Borough Council.

It was an excellent result in the first council ward contested by the BNP since the General Election.

"After a General Election all the parties have to start again, so this first campaign is always an important one," West Midlands Regional Organiser, Simon Darby, told Freedom.

"It was a very good result for us in a ward we were fighting for the first time, especially in the face of a strong Independent candidate whose husband had already been elected as a councillor for the ward.

"The Conservative contingent were very glum at the count. They fought a big campaign so to be pushed into 4th place was a disaster for them."

The Darlaston ward forms part of Walsall South, one of the few parliamentary constituencies where UKIP beat the BNP at the General Election. But there was to be no repeat performance for the media-puffed party, this time its candidate polled a derisory 72 votes, less than a quarter of those registered for the BNP.

JOHN WALKER: The BNP treasurer in the Burnley BNP office prior to examining the regional accounts.

A week later the British National Party treasurer was briefing a meeting of regional fundholders in Nottingham on the Electoral Commission's latest guidelines on accounting procedures before hotfooting it over to mid-Wales to report to the BNP's Advisory Council on the Party's finances after the biggest General Election effort in its history.

BNP launch group in Sedgefield

THE Sedgefield group of the British National Party held its launch meeting on 18th June at a plush venue in Newton Aycliffe.

Sedgefield BNP had been a part of the Stockton group but thanks to the party's continued growth in Tony Blair's constituency it has become big enough to stand on its own feet. There were over 40 present to hear British National Party chairman, Nick Griffin, speak about the various problems facing the country and BNP policies to defeat them.

North East Regional Organiser, Kevin Scott, reported on activities in the North East and election strategy for the future, whilst local activist Nigel Nevison spoke about immigrant labour which was being used by unscrupulous employers whilst Co Durham town centres were full of people of working age without a job. Making his maiden speech was the new Sedgefield organiser, Stewart Walker, who outlined plans for the area and said that the British National Party would be working for as many candidates as possible in the next round of local council elections.

5% for BNP in Uni poll

UNIVERSITY student, Joe Fallon, polled an encouraging 5% of the vote in a student union election at the University of Manchester.

Joe was standing for the position of Editor of Student Direct, and with a small band of helpers campaigned hard for the post.

Despite BNP banners being torn down, posters ripped up, and canvassers threatened by left-wing thugs, the BNP candidate managed to come 5th of the 6 candidates with 118 first preference votes and 128 overall (STV voting).

Considering the multicultural make-up of Manchester University and the fact that when the BNP stood for the same post last year, our candidate only received 16 votes, it was a very creditable performance.

Bookburning backfires

LEFT-WING students at Keele University scored a huge own goal when they burn't copies of Freedom in a anti-BNP demonstration.

The newspapers had been stolen from the room of Keele's BNP student organiser, Stephen Smith, who explained how the protest backfired. "Other students quickly saw the irony of the BNP being called totalitarian yet it was our opponents who were restricting the free flow of information by taking part in a bookburning."

Candidate praises Rochdale activists

ROCHDALE General Election Candidate, Derek Adams, was the guest speaker at the June meeting of Rochdale BNP where he was full of praise for the excellent work of his team of local activists during the campaign.

Gary Aronson, the candidate for Heywood & Middleton, also spoke on the election explaining how agonisingly close the BNP had come in his constituency to saving the deposit - just 98 votes short. The meeting, which was chaired by Rochdale fundholder Matthew Hamil, also heard from organiser, Kevin Bryan, who compared the latest results with those previously gained by the BNP in the region.

"Such a massive rise in the level of support for the BNP in the Rochdale area leaves us very well placed for the local council elections next May," he told those present.

WELL DONE: Derek Adams thanks members of Rochdale BNP for their help in getting a vote of 1773 which was 4.3% of the total votes cast.

Birmingham YBNP five-a-side

BRENDAN Gormley, Birmingham's YBNP Organiser, was delighted with the first of many social and leisure events he has planned for the summer months, after a successful five-a-side football tournament took place in the city on Saturday 11th June.

YBNP teams from north, south and east Birmingham battled it out in a Round Robin format with North Birmingham beating their neighbours from the East 6-2 in the final. Star players of the tournament were north Birmingham's John Thomason and Mike McDermott.

GOAL: It's all too late, but East Birmingham bring a bit of respectability to the scoreline by netting a second in the dying minutes of the final.

The British National Party RECRUITMENT LEAFLETS

£8.00 for 1,000

IMMIGRATION?

OPEN YOUR EYES!

According to Britain's leading population experts, the native British people will be a minority in their country by about 2060. This leaflet looks at what this means for Britain, and every aspect of life – from ships, cars, planes and services. We're already a minority in places like Leicester and inner London – the old goliaths are giving way to nations.

To make towns and cities, airports, racecourses, shopping centres, theatres, restaurants, bars, clubs, and more accommodate growing British populations, the policy of 'assimilation', and hence removal of our culture, must be maintained, but not forced, to protect our sense of nation and our unique housing culture.

The BNP's immigration policies will lead us to live in modern, well-constructed, safe, comfortable and secure homes, and to have children, and we will continue to do so.

Our people have distinctive national characteristics, and we want to keep them. We are not a threat to the environment, and we are not a threat to other peoples in their countries.

It is this that you want for your children and grand children? If future ethnic minorities are allowed to settle here, then we will have to change our laws to reflect this. What would the little people will be in the majority? One answer: National Party.

The BNP's immigration policies will give them the chance to live in Britain, and to have a future here.

All roads lead to the Ribble Valley for the BNP's Summer Family Festival

20th-21st AUGUST

THE 2005 Red, White and Blue Family Festival will be the best one ever. Nick and Suzy Cass and their RWB organising committee have been working around the clock since the General Election, arranging the British National Party's most exciting weekend of the year.

The Family Festival site is set in an area of amazing beauty, overlooking the Ribble Valley. When you wake up in the morning you can see the three highest peaks in the Yorkshire Dales, Ingleborough, Whernside and Penyghent.

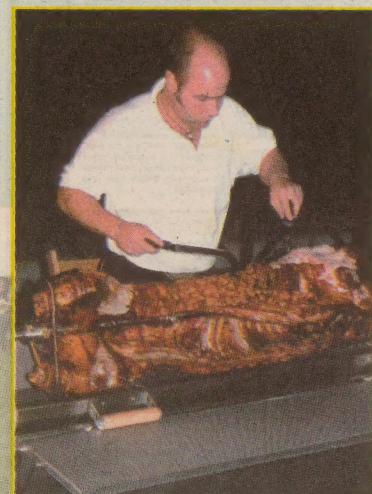

It is no exaggeration when we say that the views are breathtaking. This year the arrangements for camping have been much better organised and there are improved facilities, including running water and professionally cleaned toilets. Caravan access has been upgraded so that all caravans are welcome this year.

RWB 2005: This is what we have got for you!
